The Benefits of Cooking with Children

I don't even know how many hours I spent cooking in the kitchen with my mom or baking with my dad. I also spent many days after school with my papa who was a baker for a living. I doubt I would love cooking that much if it weren't for my parents and grandparents. I am grateful that they were patient with me. Besides fond memories, I know there are many benefits to cooking with kids. Here are a few.

The many benefits of cooking with children include:

Increases Language Development

Through listening and following instructions for the steps of each recipe.

Enhances Fine Motor Skills

Mixing the ingredients, rolling the dough, and using cookie cutters are all great ways to enhance a child's fine motor strength and control. These are skills needed to develop academic skills such as writing, cutting, and coloring. Help improve these skills even more by allowing them to slowly pour ingredients into a bowl or quickly mix ingredients together. For older children, let them help flip the pancakes.

Increases Math Ability

Through learning measurements such as cups, weight, teaspoons, and tablespoons. They will also understand fractions as well as utilize addition and subtraction skills.

Improves Reading Skills

Have children help you read recipes. Starting with numbers with the younger children, such as 2 cups of flour and 4 teaspoons of sugar. For older kids, have them read each step then follow the directions. This also helps enhance reading comprehension.

Introduces Scientific Concepts

Children will learn what happens when certain ingredients are mixed together as well as what happens when the measurements are incorrect.

Increases Focus and Attention

Children need to stay focused and pay attention to each detail or the recipe will not be completed correctly. This also teaches planning and the importance of following each step.

Teaches Life Skills

Cooking is an important life skill for all people. Children can learn early on how to prepare their own cereal and pour their own drinks. Older kids can learn to cook meals for themselves and the family. This will allow them to be more independent and responsible individuals. Cooking also teaches kids various safety lessons such as not to touch a hot stove or how to use a knife correctly.

Promotes Healthy Eating

By allowing children to cook helps them learn what foods are healthy and what are not. It allows them to try new food that they may not have tried otherwise. It encourages them to eat at home instead of out which can often provide unhealthy options. It allows for parents to introduce fresh, healthy foods to their children. They can learn about how different foods look and where they come from. They are more likely to try healthy food that they have helped to cook.

Boosts Self-Confidence

When a child is able to successfully complete a recipe and make a meal, they feel a sense of pride and confidence.

Boosts Self-Confidence

When a child is able to successfully complete a recipe and make a meal, they feel a sense of pride and confidence.

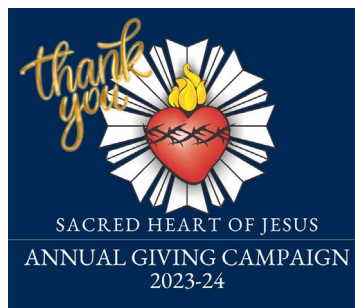

Encourages Family Bonding

Cooking is a task that the entire family can enjoy! Make it a routine to cook Sunday dinner together each week or turn Friday night into make your own pizza night. They can also learn about family traditions, recipes, and foods which they can cook in later years.

10 Kitchen Activities to complete with your children.

Here are some functional everyday activities you can start building into your daily routines. These will help facilitate your child's independence in the long term also. Remember the easier the tasks are to set up, the easier it is for you and your children to complete. In addition, the more repetitive the daily practice, the greater the benefits of learning the skill. Here are 10 super simple activities that children can practice daily when helping out in the kitchen at home. These helpful kitchen activities for kids also provide bilateral coordination practice (using both sides of the body at the same time).

- Spread butter, or jam on bread: one hand holds the knife, and one hand holds the bread.
- Pouring a drink – one hand holds the jug, and the other hand stabilizes the cup.
- Mixing and stirring – hold the bowl with one hand and use the other hand to stir with a spoon.
- Open and close jars/containers – hold the container with one hand and open the lid with the other hand.
- Roll out dough – hold a rolling pin with both hands and roll out pizza, cookie, or pie dough.
- Gather ingredients on the counter to help have everything ready.
- Wash fruit and vegetables – use both hands to gently clean the food.
- Pack up lunch or leftovers – using both hands wrap up the food.
- Set the table – carry the plates, silverware, and cups to the table.
- Clean up - Wash any sticky or messy areas of the countertop. Wring out cloth when wet.
- Safety - You'll still need to supervise and help your child with any tasks that involve the sharp knives and other utensils, the oven, stove, and hot liquids.
- Some safety ground rules that are appropriate for your child's skills and understanding will help to make your kitchen safe.
